To Freshmen.

THIS month once more we extend our welcome to the Freshmen among us. We trust that their number will be reasonably large, we feel sure that their quality as students, and subsequently as practitioners will be such as to preserve and enhance the traditional reputation of the Hospital. Last year in these columns we quoted the characteristics of the students of the various London Medical Schools as seen by a daily paper. Bart's men, we were told, possess more "side" than any other students. By all means let this be so, but let the "side" take the form of a high opinion of our Hospital rather than of ourselves. However brilliantly clever we, as students, may be, a little reflection on the lives of those who have preceded us at the Hospital during the past centuries, on the benefits they have conferred upon humanity and on their manifold contributions to medical and general knowledge, will soon serve to lessen our self-conceit and to show us that to add our names to such a roll of fame requires a life-long devotion to our work. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might" is written over the entrance to the Medical School, and the Freshman can find no better advice to adopt either in work or in play. It is enthusiasm to undertake and energy in carrying out some piece of work which will lead to its most satisfactory accomplishment, and he who can exhibit sufficient enthusiasm and energy on behalf of the Hospital will be permitted to indulge in a little self-pride without being told by his friends that he is putting on side.

With regard to his work we have little advice to offer the Freshman. There are the tutors, Mr. Waring, Dr. Garrod, and Dr. Drysdale, to whom he can apply when in difficulties. At present the work of these is somewhat handicapped by the fact that they have no official hours and no official home, so that the harassed student may find it difficult to discover his tutor; the Dean and Warden, however, are generally accessible and ready to advise. Further, the Freshman
